

We the undersigned are writing to you as Physicians and as Australians, in support of the AMA's position in favour of Marriage Equality.

As a body of medical professionals we are concerned at the move by some of our colleagues to speak out against Marriage Equality. Referring to it as “same-sex” marriage underscores some of the hurdles that are still to be overcome. The move for change is an issue of redressing a wrong, whereby the previous status quo has been to deny some sectors of our community the ability to access a fundamental right that is enjoyed by the majority. In much the same way as when racism was the norm people referred to “marriage” and “interracial marriage”, we now have individuals isolating some members of our community by placing their relationships in a different class: “same-sex marriage.” As a group, our first step in addressing the injustices against this sector of our community is to be diligent in using the terms “marriage” and “marriage equality”. The LGBTQI community are not seeking a form of marriage different to that accessed legally by the rest of the community – the right to enter into a consensual, legally recognised and binding partnership with the person they love. As such, it should not be termed differently.

As doctors we are committed to caring for our patients – without prejudice or judgement. The emotional distress to the LGBTQI community of having a group of doctors publicly speak out against them being able to access fundamental human rights will show its effects in increased depression, anxiety, self-harm, and suicidal behaviours.¹ Although we understand and support the concern over rights and safety of children within all relationships, the many diverse families throughout Australia and the world are a testament to the ability of parents outside of the traditional “one mum, one dad” model to raise children successfully. We see in our practices and with our patients the importance in the life of a child to be raised in a caring and secure environment by adults who love them. We see regularly the inability and unwillingness of parents from all backgrounds to provide this, juxtaposed against incredible stories of single parents, step-parents, adoptive parents, grandparents, and many other configurations of parenting providing optimal care to children in difficult circumstances.² Clearly it is not as simple as Biological Mum + Biological Dad = Happy Child, and it is naïve to assert otherwise. Furthermore, giving these relationships a different title, a lower status, and implying that they are inferior to other marriages produces exactly the sort of stressors that lead to relationship breakdown, and disadvantage families³ – creating just the sort of environment we do know is bad for children.

Mental health issues are one of the most serious health issues our patients have, with the propensity to have a negative impact on all aspects of their lives, health, and wellbeing. As doctors we must stand behind all of our patients, allowing them equal access to the determinants of health freely given to the broader community. To speak out against one sector of the community for wanting access to what everyone else can claim freely is discrimination in line with that historically practiced against non-white people throughout the Western world. Let us not make the same mistakes again.
